Along came New Zealand Red Cross

Over the years, New Zealand Red Cross has been there when Frank Hardy has needed it most.

In World War Two, Frank was a prisoner of war, detained by the German army.

“ Never have I forgotten the arrival of the first Red Cross parcel and subsequent weekly issue. They turned despair to tolerance. ”

Frank had no idea that seven decades later he would again call on the services of the organisation that provided a much-needed lifeline many years ago. After the Canterbury earthquakes, New Zealand Red Cross came along again with two grants so that Frank and his wife Ann could get some respite.

Frank wrote to New Zealand Red Cross saying,

“ God bless the Red Cross and everyone involved in furthering your work in meeting the demands of the world, long may it continue. Our appreciation is unbounded ”

Help New Zealand Red Cross continue our work long into the future with a gift in your will.

Give a Gift to New Zealand Red Cross in your Will

How to make the most of your gift

A gift of a percentage of your estate will help make a difference to the lives of vulnerable people. It will hold its value better than a gift of a fixed sum. It is also an easy way to provide for the causes that are important to you after family and loved ones have been looked after.

Other ways you can include New Zealand Red Cross in your Will are:

- Gifting the amount left over from your estate once you have provided for loved ones.
- Leaving a fixed amount of money to New Zealand Red Cross.

Some important wording

The following is a suggested statement that can be used in your Will when making a bequest to New Zealand Red Cross.

Leaving a Legacy of Hope

Red Cross started in New Zealand when people, moved by the suffering caused by World War One, came together to help the wounded and others in need.

In the years since, in response to disease, conflict, disaster and community need, compassionate New Zealanders like you have continued to make a difference to the lives of people facing extraordinary circumstances.

For over 100 years New Zealand Red Cross has been bringing comfort and care to vulnerable people in this country and overseas. Red Cross is part of the fabric of this nation, and has been involved during some of its most enduring events.
